

Not even 2 years old and one South African airline has already reached a multitude of milestones

In November 2006, South Africa's famed national carrier, SAA, decided to launch a low budget domestic alternative. Unassumingly named "Mango", they had little idea how quickly the child would challenge the parent. Because that's just what's happened. By using existing SAA infrastructure to fly between South Africa's foremost economic hubs; Johannesburg, Cape Town, Durban and Bloemfontein; Mango also leads the country's airfields with its cheeky, passenger-pleasing innovations – both in the air and on the ground.

First to introduce "buy a flight while you buy your groceries"

Mango successfully introduced instore purchasing of flights at MoneyMarkets at these fine South African supermarkets: Checkers, Shoprite and CheckersHyper. The chains dominate the SA retail landscape, and are found in every corner of the country.

First to offer South Africans a jetset lifestyle on a ready-to-wear clothing budget

Being first to partner with the country's pre-eminent apparel and lifestyle group, Edcon, means hundreds of thousands of stylish South Africans can now buy flights, using their store credit cards.

An airline that offers truly discounted hotel accommodation tie-ins

Preferential rates on accommodation at one of SA's favourite hotel chains, Southern Sun, means Mango Guests land as comfortably as they fly.

Affordable car rental partner

With unimaginably generous discounts on car rentals from Tempest Car Hire, no wonder so many newly airborne travellers are taking up fly-drive packages.

First to ensure business people can afford a little luxury without breaking the bank

Ticket flexibility without penalty, 30kg baggage weight allowances, automatic access to BidAir Services Airport Lounges in 3 major airports countrywide, complimentary on-board refreshments and a host of other benefits have persuaded the business-minded that Mango sub-brand, Mango Plus, is the way above the rest, bottomline. (See overleaf for details.)
